SUBJECT: Validation Workshop on the Teachers' Workload Study

DATE: February 12, 2019

The Department of Education (DepEd), through the Bureau of Human Resource and Organizational Development (BHROD), enables the employees and the organization through the development and management of human resource and organizational development standards, systems, and policies to maximize potential towards achieving organizational goals. Part of the directions by the Bureau is to rationalize structures, processes, and manpower requirements in the school level, and ultimately, to define the basic standards for an effective school. This triggered the study done by the Human Resource Development Division (HRDD) on the inventory of tasks done by school-based personnel, particularly teachers, with the end goal of understanding the need for additional teaching and/or non-teaching personnel in schools and the appropriate mechanisms needed to be in place to incentivize teachers handling ancillary tasks due to the lack sufficient manpower.

Parallel to this are the efforts done by the Planning Service on the review of the existing school forms being downloaded to and reported by schools to different governance levels, with the objective of rationalizing data elements in existing school forms and creating simplified new forms without compromising the quality of data being gathered. In the same way, the Planning Service required information on the current workload of teachers in schools, particularly in relation to analyzing the School Form (SF) 7. The objective of this initiative is to come up with a policy as well as a balancing tool that will help ease the school's preparation of SF7.

The collaboration and alignment of the outputs of the two offices have led to need to validate the inventory of teachers' workload and their weight equivalence, fill in the gaps of the reports particularly the specific issuances that mandated the identified workload downloaded to schools, gather additional information with regard to the optimal process per workload and per type of school, identify the reportorial requirements from each governance level, recommend support mechanisms and data collection protocols in each governance levels, among others.
